RUSSIAN

GUIDE TO RUSSIAN PRONUNCIATION

Vowels. Vowels with an acute accent (á, é, ó, ú, í, ý) are pronounced more energetically than unaccented vowels (a, ā, u, i, ỹ); in some cases they also have a qualitative difference:

á	a in father (but closer to Spanish a)
a	like á but shorter, less forcefully pronounced ā	a in about
é	e in bet
ó	o in horse (au in taut , but more rounded) ú	oo in boot (but closer to French ou in foutre)
u	same as ú , but pronounced less energetically í	i in machine (but closer to French i in machine) i	i in pin
ý	y in sylvan . A high central vowel; the tongue rises toward the center of the palate and the lips are unrounded (for i the tongue rises toward the front of the palate, for u , toward the back).
ỹ	same as ý , but pronounced less energetically

Consonants.

y	y in young
p	p in spin
b	b in but
t	t in stop
d	d in dog
f	f in fun
v	v in vote
k	k in skull
g	g in gun
s	s in song
z	z in zone
l	l in silver
r	r in run, but trilled
m	m in mop
n	n in note
h	h in hot (closer to German ch in ach) ts	ts in hats
ch	ch in cheese
sh	sh in shriek
sh'	sh in she; longer than sh , with the blade of the tongue closer to the palate
zh	s in pleasure

Soft consonants. Most of the consonants may be either "hard" (unpalatalized) or "soft" (palatalized). In pronouncing the soft consonants the tongue moves upward toward the palate. This results in the impression of a weak "y" sound between the consonant and a following vowel. Soft n' is close to French gn in oignon; soft l' is close to Italian gl in coglione. Soft t' and d' have slight fricative (s and z, respectively) offglides. The difference between k', g', and h' and their hard counterparts is less noticeable to the American ear. Consonants followed by an apostrophe are soft. The following consonants have hard and soft forms:

p b t d f v k g s z l r m n h
p' b' t' d' f' v' k' g' s' z' l' r' m' n' h'

The consonants sh, zh, ts are always hard; ch and sh' are always soft.

Unless otherwise noted, the nominative and genitive singular of nouns and the imperfective infinitive and first and third persons singular of verbs are given.
